

“I don’t give up easily. Challenges to aate rehte hain life mein. But I’ve learnt to overcome them,” says a brimming Sakshi. But this was not the case when she first came to ETASHA. In her own words, “I had issues with following a time table or any kind of rules and regulations. But my faculty explained to me that an organised work set up would require dedication and one would have to follow certain rules of the office.” Gradually she realised the value of time management and also overcame her shyness by regularly participating in group and extempore activities.

Saskhi’s first job was of tele-fundraising where she performed remarkably. She later moved to Nestle’s pet care shop where again she championed sales and customer relations. Her politeness, knowledge about the product and willingness to learn is highly appreciated by her seniors. “I attribute my success to ETASHA’s training where I learnt valuable lessons of life like ‘taking your job seriously’, ‘being punctual and managing your time’ and most importantly always being positive in any situation.

Today her employers send her to any centre where sales dip. "My parents are very proud of my achievements and many young girls in my locality now take guidance from me on career and life's long-term goals," says a proud Sakshi.

Sakshi was fortunate to have encountered ETASHA and together we ran the last mile to hone her employability skills.

Today she realises the value of work-space skills and attributes, and paves her own path towards success. However, there are many Sakshis waiting to be skilled and employed, lest they get into the rut of early marriage and domestic violence.
